For once, women dominate these Friday Releases. And that's perfect! Let's leave Indiana for Massachusetts, but keep clapping your hands, to meet Jacquie Clay, in a little more pop atmosphere, with lots of light and warmth, in her new single "Lighter Now". We just told you that the indie music world is a small world. Another proof: Jacquie co-wrote the song with ... Marina Bennett. Yes, Marina again. We'll have to send Marina a little gift because that's a lot of artists! Jacquie Clay grew up with music in her veins, and you can hear it. Having had a few health issues that kept her from playing the piano for a while, Jacquie is now back, stronger than ever, and her love of music shines through this song.

With magnificent backing vocals and certain vocal ease, Jacquie invites us to finally enjoy the present moment, and we all need this breath of fresh air after these tough 18 months: "feel the sunrise, your hand in mine, finally I'm free, I'm safe ". This is definitely my favorite line of this joyful anthem that you will want to play on repeat. If you are like me, of a little curious nature, you will be tempted to go for a ride on her Spotify to take advantage of the two previous releases, which are also really worth it. Jacquie Clay is a ray of sunshine, able to put a smile on your face in an instant, and this new single "Lighter Now" will envelop you like cotton to make you feel safe. She's a flower that begs to bloom. So don't hesitate to show her some love on her socials, she deserves it. Again, you may kill the replay button.
